

History as a political issue in intra-Maghreb relations

Amar MOHAND-AMER

CRASC, Oran, Algeria

It is important in the current configuration of the Maghreb torn by political and territorial dissensions to take into account the common history of the three countries (Morocco, Algeria and Tunisia), this in order to fully understand the political issues of today.

From this perspective, the history of the three countries under French colonization as well as the independence processes provide the keys to analyzing what happened to the Maghrebian dream faced with the omnipotence of the nation-state.

Also, communication will revolve around this diptych : project of a unitary Maghreb / constitution of fundamental national states. In this context, I will address the difficult question of border issues and ideological alliances formed at the time of independence and their consequences for the region. This will be the case in particular for Algeria with Nasserist Egypt and its consequences for its relations with Tunisia.